NEW YORK

In Support Of The Connecting Families Bill Package

Connecting Families is a coalition of directly impacted families and advocates in New York fighting to end the predatory cost of prison and jail communication and ensure that incarcerated people and their loved ones can communicate routinely and without barriers to access.

#ConnectFamiliesNY

We urge the passage of the Connecting Families Act (A3096 and S3512 as amended) and keep families connected by making phone calls and emails free in New York State prisons and county jails.

Communicating with loved ones is an essential human need. Yet, for people who are incarcerated in New York and their loved ones, the predatory costs of prison and jail phone calls makes connecting nearly impossible. These costs force incarcerated people and their families to choose between paying for basic necessities or staying connected. The financial impact of this choice is felt most acutely by economically distressed communities and communities of color. In fact, one in three families goes into debt just to hear the voice of a loved one.

The Connecting Families Act will help connect families by allowing incarcerated people to communicate with their loved ones at no cost.

Prison telecom corporations and jail administrators are exploiting families' human need to stay connected. In New York state prisons, incarcerated people and their families are charged 65 cents for a 15-minute phone call — or as much as seven hours of work for an incarcerated person. A simple electronic message costs 23 to 30 cents to send. In New York's jails, counties take an average 47 percent commission on calls, and a single 15-minute call can cost as much as $10.42 with taxes and deposit fees tacked on top.

Communication costs trap incarcerated people and their families in a cycle of debt and poverty. Over 50 percent of families with an incarcerated loved one struggle to meet basic housing and food needs.^[3] Families often have to decide between basic essentials like groceries and communicating with an incarcerated loved one. One study revealed that one in three families with an incarcerated loved one goes into debt in order to stay connected, and 87 percent of those costs are carried by women.^[4]

The emotional and financial stress of limited and costly prison and jail communication is felt most acutely in Black and Latinx communities, which are disproportionately impacted by targeted racist over-policing, harsh sentencing guidelines, and mass criminalization. Over 75 percent of people incarcerated in New York's state prisons are Black and Latinx, despite Black and Latinx people making up less than 37 percent of the state's population.

For the families of the approximately 32,000 people incarcerated in state prisons and 15,000 people in local jails, this relief is urgently needed.^[5] Speaking with family and friends can not only provide relief from the debilitating isolation felt by people who are incarcerated, but can also set them up for success after release. New York can prioritize the mental wellbeing of incarcerated people, and alleviate the economic stress on their families by making prison and jail communication available at no cost.
